Imagine Global Revolution
(poem)

Ron Sakolsky

Spring, 2012

What I love about
the occupy movement
is that it makes no demands.
Is
a space
in which possibility
expands.
An opening
for imaginations
to upset
the applecart
of acquiescent
relations.
Imagine clearing the slate opening the gate rejecting the horrors of industrial civ un-Occupying Turtle Island and starting to live.

Imagine not simply eliminating corporate greed, but creating a world with no corporations to heed, a planet with no capitalist system to feed.
Imagine not just governmental reform, but an end to government with freedom the norm. Not a left-wing Tea Party of patriotic citizen dissenters, but the demise of the nation state and an end to renters.

Imagine not merely Officer Eco-Friendly on a bike, but No Cops to dislike no police (to) force, none at all, as a matter of course.
Imagine
occupying
all the institutions
of the capitalist state without official permission
from the keepers
of the gate.
Occupying everything
that you now hate,
and transforming
the world
before it’s too late.

Tear up
the bloody Constitution.
Kick anarchy
and start rockin’
global revolution!
